

Acknowledgments

The collaborative authors wish to thank the following Syracuse departments and individuals for their support and contributions to the production of this text.

The staff of the Professional Development Programs of the Graduate School

The teachers and staff of the Writing Program

The TAs who contributed their teaching expertise through interviews in Fall 2001

The undergraduate and graduate students in our classes who challenged us to develop and revise our pedagogies

The colleagues who contributed teaching ideas in our offices, in hallways and via email

Participants in the 2002 FPP/PFF Minnowbrook Conference for their input and comments

The friends and family who supported the development and production of this project

Jeanette Jeneault whose design expertise and patience with the editorial process translated our words into a dynamic teaching tool

Rodger Mack for the use of his sculpture in our cover and chapter design

The staff at Midtown Printing for their production assistance

Special thanks to Assistant Dean of the Graduate School and TA Program, Stacey Lane Tice, for her ongoing support and enthusiasm for the project.

Finally, many thanks to the collaborative authors of this book. We were privileged to work with teacher-scholars dedicated to reflective practice and the quality of the teaching-learning environment at Syracuse University. Over the course of the two semesters we worked on this book, different members of our group of authors passed comprehensive and qualifying exams, defended dissertation proposals, got married, navigated adoption procedures, taught classes, conducted research, and generally juggled the demands of graduate student life. Their commitment to the project was extraordinary and we value their dedication, intelligence, humor, and collegiality.
