Literary Essays in Honor of William Wasserstrom

- Andrew Hudgins      “My Only Swerving”: Sentimentality in Contemporary Poetry. Page 5.
The article looks at several contemporary poems to see how they succumb to sentimentality in their treatment of nature, while William Stafford’s “Traveling through the Dark” does not.
- Judith Weissman      “Who Can Rule and Dare Not Lie”: Tennyson’s Bicameral King. Page 15.
Tennyson’s poetry is pervaded by the kinds of auditory hallucinations that Julian Jaynes describes in The Origin of Consciousness in the Breakdown of the Bicameral Mind. Tennyson begins in a late stage of Jaynes’s history, with the voices of demons, and moves backward to Jaynes’s point of origin, the admonitory voice of the tribal king.
- Leslie A. Fiedler      Puritanism: The Persistence of a Myth. Page 31.
A study of the impact on subsequent literature and criticism of the myth of American Puritanism invented in Victorian times and given its classic formulation by Hawthorne in The Scarlet Letter.
- J. H. Matthews      Surrealism: Perspectives on the Avant-Garde. Page 38.
Tests the hypothesis that two forms of the avant-garde exist, the official and the unofficial.
- Tess Gallagher      The Poem as a Reservoir for Grief. Page 49.
America is a nation perhaps almost ready for the serious work of grieving. While other methods for handling grief often neglect or trivialize the occasion, poems remain able to carry the density of a complex synthesis of spiritual, intellectual, and emotional perceptions.
- C. Roland Wagner      Tootsie, Feminism, and the Modern Self. Page 60.
The movie Tootsie not only reflects increasing American tolerance of androgyny in both men and women, but also celebrates an old-fashioned ideal of self-discipline, an ideal implicit in a male incarcerating himself within the prison of femininity and learning from it. It is an achievement of the modernist temper.

W. D. Snodgrass

The author describes how he gave up his studies in music, which thereupon assumed a dominant influence in his literary career.

Fiction

William Kittredge

Syracuse Scholar invites submissions from present or past members of the Syracuse University faculty, alumni of the graduate schools, and distinguished visitors to the campus. The editors are interested in essays on matters of scholarly or public interest, scientific articles, discussions of controversial issues, poetry and short fiction. Artists are invited to submit original work.

The Chicago Manual of Style (University of Chicago Press) and Strunk and White, Elements of Style (Macmillan) should be consulted as guides to the presentation of written material.

Art submissions (including photography) should be unpublished work intended for the print medium. Whenever possible, reproductions will be made directly from the original art.

Queries and submissions should be addressed to the Editor, Syracuse Scholar, Syracuse University, 220 Sims 3, Syracuse, New York 13210.

Syracuse Scholar wishes to thank the following members of the Syracuse University faculty and friends of the university for their generous assistance as manuscript reviewers:

John Agnew, Tej K. Bhatia, Daan Braveman, Raymond Carver, Daniel Doyle, Philip Dunham, Tess Gallagher, Barry Glassner, C. L. Hardin, Berj Harootunian, Sharon Hollenback, A.
