Syracuse Scholar
Volume 6, Number 1
Spring 1985

- Fred M. Frohock      Arithmetic vs. Morality: Liberalism in Collective Choice. Page 5.
The author argues that collective choice theory relies on a number of background concepts that are not recognized in the formal delineations of the theory. Some of these background concepts describe a liberal community. These liberal premises conflict with the more explicit arithmetical languages of collective choice, and this conflict explains some of the rational breakdowns between one and all demonstrated in collective choice.
- Jonathan Marwil      Historians of Their Own Times. Page 27.
This article urges greater appreciation of the accounts written by witnesses to historical events.
- Ludwig K. Stein      Paintings on Paper. Page 39.
The process of drawing, mark making, and layering results in a highly personal calligraphy.
- Susan Hubbard      The Sitter. Page 45.
Stories involving the high personal risks inherent in seeking intimacy with others. In each, characters grow to realize that the closer they become, the stranger they seem to each other.
- Gordon Beadle      George Orwell and the American Conservatives. Page 61.
Examines the nature of the unfounded belief that George Orwell supported the political views of American conservatives.
- Robert Lietz      Poetry
As If Herbert Street Meant This. Page 60.
- David Ray      Between Alp and Sea. Page 71.
