Spring 5-1-2010

A Field Guide to the Irish Fantastic; A Study in Concept Art

Elizabeth Ames Gross

Follow this and additional works at: https://surface.syr.edu/honors_capstone
Part of the Book and Paper Commons, and the Illustration Commons

Recommended Citation
https://surface.syr.edu/honors_capstone/315

This Honors Capstone Project is brought to you for free and open access by the Syracuse University Honors Program Capstone Projects at SURFACE. It has been accepted for inclusion in Syracuse University Honors Program Capstone Projects by an authorized administrator of SURFACE. For more information, please contact surface@syr.edu.
FIELD GUIDE TO THE IRISH FANTASTIC

WRITTEN AND ILLUSTRATED BY ELIZABETH GOSS
There is no doubt at all but that there's the same sort of things in other countries;
but you hear more about them in these parts because the Irish do be more familiar in talking of them.

-Lady Gregory
Congratulations on your acquisition of Field Guide to the Irish Fantastic. This book contains the very latest information on both the individual fairies and troop fairies currently populating Ireland. We are certain you will find this book to be an essential part of any journey to the emerald isle and wish you the best of luck in your travels. We would like to take a moment to remind you that this book is not designed to be used as a weapon and we are not responsible for any damages you or your copy sustain in the field. Happy trails!

-Sincerely, the Editors
The Banshee

About: Arguably the rarest of the Irish Fey, the Banshee, or bean sí, is a lonely fairy whose mournful cries have been heard in almost every corner of Ireland. These sorrowful specters serve as the death heralds for the most ancient and noble of Irish families. There is great debate over which exact families qualify for bonds with banshees, but it is likely that no more than 10 families have ever been considered worthy. When the last member of one of these bloodlines dies, the Banshee is released from her duties and, usually, disappears. A few banshees, however, have resolved to cry for their appointed families for all time. Although the origin of these exclusively female fairies is unknown, it has been speculated that they are professionaliners gifted with life after death to continue serving the families they love so dearly.

If you meet one: Identifying a Banshee is relatively simple. You are likely to hear this fairy before you see her. She always appears as a pale weeping woman with a misty floating quality about her person. She may appear young or old and usually give off a sense of profound calm. If you choose to approach a Banshee, be sure to note her mood. A Banshee found crying and combing her hair is in a gentle state of mind and may be safely engaged. If, however, the specter appears to be washing something, you should leave her alone. Although the Banshee is a peaceful creature by nature, she can be understandably irritable when washing the bloody clothing of her dying charge.
I would stand barefooted in the snow listening to the tune she had, so nice and calm and so mournful.

—Old Simon
ABOUT: When a human being is particularly beautiful or talented, the fairies will often steal him away and leave a substitute, or changling, in his place. Enchanted objects, stunted fairy children, and elderly fairies may all serve as replacements for “taken” humans, but no matter what they may actually be, changlings always behave the same way: sour tempered, disobedient, loud, aloof, and argumentative. These fairies bring nothing but sorrow to the families they join. In addition to having unpleasant personalities, changlings are notoriously ugly and unlucky. A family struggling to deal with a changling may go to extreme measures to remove the creature. One of the most common changling cures is to poison the fairy with foxglove. Although this treatment may be horrifying, if a changling can be driven from the home, the person it replaced will return. Most families, however, wait for the changling to die on its own.

IF YOU MEET ONE: Changelings are masters of disguise and should be approached with caution, but they are not dangerous to travelers. If, however, you stay in a town where changlings are common, it would be best to take precautions against being taken by the local fairies. Children are especially susceptible to being taken, so if you are traveling with a young person, be sure to have him wear something made of iron.
and in the place it was buried they found nothing but three planks of wood...

—Mrs. Feeney
The Dullahan

About: The Dullahan, or Gan Ceann, is the most gruesome of the Irish fairies. A collector of souls, he takes orders only from Death himself and usually appears in the form of a headless man on an enormous black horse. The Dullahan carries his rotten disembodied head with him as a lantern and uses a human spine as a whip. He is also known to bring a bucket of blood with him as he rides. Anyone unfortunate enough to have this blood thrown into his face is doomed to die. In some parts of Ireland, the Dullahan has been seen driving a silent black coach and following the cries of the Banshee to the homes of his victims. This master of death has only one weakness: gold. Where most fairies are terrified of iron, the Dullahan lives in fear of pins, coins, and other gold objects.

If you meet one: Realistically, if the Dullahan has been sent out to fetch your soul, there is no real hope of escape. If, however, you just happen to end up in this fairy's way, you do have a reasonable chance of surviving the encounter. When you see a Dullahan, get down on the ground and cover your eyes. Being headless, the Dullahan has a particular dislike for people with good eyesight and will strike out your eyes with his whip if you give him the opportunity. When traveling in Dullahan territory, make sure you always have something made of gold on your person, and be sure to stay inside on the Celtic feast days.
and he followed the boat a great way, but she said nothing. But a gold pin that was in her hair fell out and into the sea... then it disappeared.

-MARY MORAN
The Greyman

About: The Grey Man, sometimes called Far Liath, appears as a man wrapped in thick fog or mist. He relishes human suffering and often ventures into cities to feed on chimney smoke and spread pestilence. He has a special fondness for ports and, after wreaking his fill of havoc in the city, the Grey Man will often head out to sea and use his foggy cloak to hide rocks from incoming ships. In the country, this nasty fairy spoils food stored for winter and poisons animals with his foul breath. In some parts of Ireland, Greyman is such a feared creature that special paths have been created to encourage him to travel away from humans.

If you meet one: the Grey Man is a very mean spirited creature and can be dangerous. He is difficult to avoid because of his similarity of common fog, but you can usually tell when the Grey Man is nearby because of the scent of death lingering in the air. Saying "God bless you" may drive the fairy off for a short time, but he never leaves for long. When in Far Liath country, sprinkle holy water on anything that can mildew or rot and your belongings will be protected.
Everyone of them was black and not fit for eating. Far Liath had touched them and he hadn’t missed a single potato.

-Johnny Aherne
The Leprechaun

About: Widely considered to be the patron fairy of Ireland, the leprechaun is the shoe maker of the fairy world. Appearing in the form of a small grouchy man, the leprechaun can usually be found smoking a long pipe and working earnestly on beautiful leather goods and shoes. They tend to be foul-mouthed, a condition not helped by their love of beer and whiskey and high spirited. Remarkably clever, these plucky fairies are in charge of guarding the gold of other fey creatures and they take great pleasure in outwitting humans who would steal it from them. When not gainfully employed in shoe making, leprechauns have a tendency to cause chaos on local farms. Some of their favorite pass times include stealing horses, robbing wine cellars, and breaking plates. While they may be mischievous, leprechauns are also very honorable creatures and they reward humans almost as frequently as they trick them.

If you meet one: Leprechauns are not dangerous, but they are tricky. Solitary by nature, leprechauns believe that humans are silly and shallow, a perspective not helped by humanity's continuous pursuit of leprechaun gold. Your chances of actually running into a leprechaun are slim, but if you do happen upon one, be polite and try to discover if he needs any help. Offering to do a favor for a leprechaun without expecting a reward is very good luck, but be careful not to promise anything before you know what you are agreeing to.
they’ll not do you much harm if you leave them alone.
-MARTIN KING
Lianhan Shee

About: the Lianhan Shee is a demon of desire; a cruel coquette who plays with mortal emotions for her own amusement. This brutal fairy assumes whatever form is most desirable to her intended victim and then begins a long and thorough seduction. She is beautiful, gentle, loving, and deadly. The arrangement is simple. If the Lianhan Shee’s initial advances are rebuffed, she become the devoted slave of the mortal who spurned her. However, if her flirtations are accepted, the mortal grows more and more devoted to her until he is consumed by love and dies. Artists are especially susceptible to her charms and many a musician has withered away singing of his love for the Lianhan Shee.

If you meet one: the Lianhan Shee is definitely a fairy to stay away from and should be considered very dangerous. Common sense is the greatest defense against this fairy; if you meet a woman who seems too good to be true, she probably is. Fortunately, there is only one Lianhan Shee in all the world so encounters with her are rare.
The handsome they like, and the good dancers.

—Mr. Saggaarton
Merrows

About: Merrows have two genders and can be found in great numbers along the coasts of Ireland. The males are ugly but jovial and are bringers of good luck. Their lovely female counterparts, however, are sure signs of storms and delight in taunting sailors. Female merrows are voluptuous women with fishy tails. Called Mara-Warras or Maighdean Mharas, these sensual fairies are famous for their vanity. They sometimes wear red caps and may spend long hours admiring themselves on sunny rocks. If a merrow’s red cap is captured by a mortal man, she will become human, forget her life in the waves, and be his obedient wife until the end of her days. Unfortunately her heart never settles into life on land and if she ever discovers her cap, she will abandon her mortal family without a backward glance.

If you meet one: Male merrows are clever and engaging fairies who love to have a good time. Encounters with them are very rewarding and should be sought out if possible. To make a good impression on a male merrow, all you need do is present him with a keg of brandy.

Female merrows are rather haughty and can be unpleasant, but they are more mischievous than malicious. They are highly receptive to flattery and will often provide valuable directions and information in return for sweet talk.
there is no luck if you meet a mermaid and you out at sea but storms will come or some ill will happen.

-John Corley
The Pooka

About: The Pooka is a remarkable creature with the ability to shape-shift. Sometimes it appears as an eagle or a black goat, sometimes it is a goblin or a donkey, but its preferred form is that of a great and terrible horse. The Pooka smells of sulfur and it speaks Irish and English in a deep booming voice.

Nothing pleases this fairy more than dashing back and forth across the whole of Ireland with an unfortunate human being clinging to his back. These unlucky people either die of fright, or if they survive to make multiple journeys, waste away from lack of sleep. The Pooka causes insomnia, eats crops, destroys land and buildings, and loves every minute of the chaos. Long ago, the Pooka swore an oath to Brian Boru, the high king of Ireland, to never harm an Irishman or harry a good Christian. In the years without the good king's influence, the Pooka has partially forgotten his promise. He still menaces the Irish people, but he mostly focuses his attention on drunks and the cruel hearted.

If you meet one: Interacting with the Pooka is not for the faint of heart, but if you are daring, he can be a powerful positive force. The Pooka often gives advice in return for offerings and has the gift of prophecy. As with all Irish fae, however, it is important to be polite when speaking to the Pooka. A rude human may well find himself carried off into the the night or worse.
Every night she went out and she got thin and tired like.
-Nora Whelan
Will-o-the Wisps

ABOUT: the Will-o-the Wisps is a gentle and reclusive creature. Often confused with the Sheerie, evil lights on land and water that lead people astray, the Will-o-the Wisps appears as a group of floating lights and helps travelers find their way in the dark. The Will-o-the Wisps has never been seen during the daytime and this field guide is the first to include images of what the creature actually looks like. They are quiet social animals who feed on swamp weeds and grasses, their lights always appear in densely wooded areas at times of great need and are helpful to all who can see them. While the reason behind the Will-o-the Wisps's interest in aiding human beings is unknown, their efforts are deeply appreciated.

If you meet one: it is important to be able to distinguish between a Will-o-the Wisps and a Sheerie. The simplest difference to identify at a distance is that the Sheerie make a high pitched whining sound while the Will-o-the Wisps are entirely silent. Will-o-the Wisps are also known to emit a light that is both brighter and bluer than the sickly corpse-light of the Sheerie. Will-o-the Wisps are not dangerous and are safe to approach and follow.
There was a big standing stone. . . which I had to pass on my way home every evening. This time it was all lit up with dancing lights.

-Man from County Limerick
The Sidhe

About: The sidhe are the most common fairies in Ireland. These are the fairies referred to as the folk, the people, or the Dundonian. These are the fairies who steal young mothers and children, who give the evil eye, who with a single touch can make a healthy man lame, but they are also the fairies who throw great feasts, help with field work, and heal the sick. All who live have friends and enemies among them. The sidhe live in clans under mounds of earth. Each mound is ruled by a queen and a fool. The queens are human women who have been taken from the mortal realm, but the fools are always pure Fey. They are a tall and handsome race with beautiful angular features and incredible powers. Like most fairies, they have a terrible fear of iron and enjoy playing tricks on mortals.

If you meet one: The sidhe are not violent or malicious by nature, but they do demand respect from mortals. If you encounter one of the people, you should do your very best not to antagonize him. They are incredible musicians and throw wonderful balls and feasts which you may be invited to attend if you make a favorable impression. Be aware however, that if you ever eat fairy food, you will be unable to leave the sidhe mound and will be at their mercy until they choose to release you. The sidhe often roam about the land invisibly, so it is best to never speak ill of them. They are a generous people and will not do you harm unless you give them reason to.
The sidhe cannot make themselves visible to all. They are shape changers, they can grow large or small, they can take what shape they choose. They appear as men or women wearing clothes of many colours, of today or of some old forgotten fashion... they are everywhere.

-Lady Gregory
Although the Sidhe usually appear in a human-like form, they have been known to use their magic to take the shape of any number of strange creatures.
Bibliography

