Bunker Reclamation

Demosthenes Sfakianakis

Follow this and additional works at: https://surface.syr.edu/architecture_theses

Part of the Architecture Commons

Recommended Citation
https://surface.syr.edu/architecture_theses/468

This Thesis, Senior is brought to you for free and open access by the School of Architecture Dissertations and Theses at SURFACE. It has been accepted for inclusion in Architecture Senior Theses by an authorized administrator of SURFACE. For more information, please contact surface@syr.edu.
Bunker Reclamation

Demosthenes Sfakianakis

Thesis Document - Spring 2020
Thesis Advisors: Matthew Celmer, Abingo Wu
Research Grant Advisor: Joseph Godlewska
thesis intent

+ an analysis and documentation of the extremes of the communist regime of Albania
+ a political exploration into the dictatorship of the proletariat in which the working class holds power in a post-Hoxha environment
+ a design implementation in which the bunkers are reclaimed from the charged symbolism of oppression and become agents towards a collective catharsis and healing

contents

Historical Analysis

The Bunkers of Albania

I Burgosur (The Prisoner): A Post-Hoxha Epic

Act 1: Hoxha’s Regime

Act 2: I Burgosur (The Prisoner)

Act 3: The Bunker

Act 4: Shpresa (Hope)

Sources
A primary influence of this thesis are the works of Paul Virilio and Claude Parent. The architecture and theory duo documented and interpreted the bunkers of Hitler’s Atlantic Wall along the coast of Europe and Scandinavia.

In equal parts an implementation of theory of movement as well as the transformation of militaristic form into a sacred space.
Concrete Mushrooms
Elian Stefa & Gyler Mydyti
2013

With hardly any discourse outside of Albania, these bunkers represent a unique opportunity to pursue the charged forms within the contemporary context.

+ Illyrian, Thracian, Greek tribes
+ Greek colonies
+ Roman provinces

+ Ottoman Occupation

+ Italian Occupation

+ Soviet Union Satellite

DEMOSTHENES
SKANDERBEG
POLYTECHNIC UNIVERSITY OF TIRANA
NATIONAL HISTORY MUSEUM
Albania is a relatively young nation, marred by a history of occupation and foreign rule - the celebrated moments in Albanian history are closely linked to national identity and rebellion.

Independent as of 1912, Albania remained susceptible to foreign influence. Primarily in the appeal of communism amidst the rise of China and the Soviet Union.
Throughout his reign, the infamous leader of Albania, Enver Hoxha, implemented a radical form of communism which scarred the nation indefinitely. The dictator pursued Hoxhaism, which relied on national isolation and manipulation of the people. This power was maintained by a strict visual language that punished nonconformist architectural forms and required specific color palettes and subjects in art. The items on the left were acceptable to the regime, however, the items to the right resulted in the imprisonment of their creators.
In order for Albania to function under Communist rule, the entirety of the nation was required to shift towards a period of total industrialization and surveillance. While the economy was focused on internal production, the general population was monitored to minimize dissidence and assure devout following. These two measures were realized through the commitment to silence any hint of dissidence while at the same time provide Albania with a framework of industrial growth.

It was during this period that political imprisonment and persecution became common place. Inspired by Stalin’s stringent methods of political suppression, Hoxha sought to quiet any form of rejection to his communist beliefs. Through the services of the Sigurimi, the Directorate of State Security, Hoxha began to imprison religious figures, artists, architects, writers, and citizens across the nation. These prisons ranged in size and function, some served as internment camps, while others functioned as forced labor camps that survivors have equated to the concentration camps of Nazi Germany. Amidst this communal oppression, those not seized by the military, were often required to relocate to satisfy the demand of workers in the rapidly industrializing factory cities.

The actions of Hoxha’s dictatorship defined communist Albania, and ultimately warped the nation after the dissolution of communism in Albania and throughout the world. The death of Hoxha and subsequent removal of the leading communist party exposed this period for its realized effects.

Of the prisons used during the communist Albania, Spacë remains one of the most infamous. Located, in the northern half of Albania, Spacë functioned primarily as a political prison. Those who were assumed to have manifested any idea against the idea of the communist reign of Enver Hoxha were often sent to Spacë. However, the inmates of this prison does not arise from its list of influential captives, but rather the forced labor which was required of them.

Not only were the citizens of Albania seized and placed into Spacë, but those held in this prison were required to commit to forced labor. Adjacent to a mine, captives were demanded to mine for hours each day for the entirety of their sentences.

The industrial development which occurred in Elbasan is emblematic of the massive economic shift which Hoxha associated with Albania’s greatness. Located 50 km from the capital, Tirana, Elbasan served as the nexus of industry during the communist period in Albania. The industrial city was composed of: a metallurgy plant, ferrochrome plant, and large scale factories of cement, bricks, and wood. Elbasan quickly became the center of industrial development.

Influenced by other factors such as the KESH “Korporata Elektro-energjetike Shqiptare” (the Albanian Electric Enterprise), which provided the electricity for the industry of Elbasan to function, the growth of this area became a national effort. This is also seen through the use of hydro-energy transmission and the nearby power plant of Banjë to succeed Hoxha’s mission.
A main product of the manufacture of the regime was the bunker. From 1967 to 1986, Hoxha sought to defend his nation from invasion by constructing and distributing an estimated 180,000 to 750,000 bunkers. The bunker diagram shown is the Qender Zjarri or “firing position” and represents the smallest and most common of the three types of bunkers created.
The material consumption is staggering and to many Albanians the effort should have gone toward nationwide infrastructural development.

“...which are a big part of our population are emotionally charged about this architecture or infrastructure. Our generation is not so emotionally connected; we see in a different perspective but there is a generation that looks at the bunker as a very bad memory of the past of what they could have done better.”

Joana Dhiamandi, POLIS University
The Bunkerization of Albania

David Price

Concrete Mushrooms

Elian Stefa & Gyler Mydyti

- as ruins in the landscape
- as spaces converted to local use
- as spaces converted to new uses proper to the consumption of the bunker fantasy
- as spaces converted to reflection on the bunker fantasy and on bunkerization as such.

- highland  - [S], “qender zjarri”
- lowland  - [M], “pike zjarri”
- urban     - [L], “struktura speciale”

Projekti Bunkerizimit: The Strange Case of The Albanian Bunker

Jason Payne
Urban Condition
Highland Condition

Durrës Hill

Mount Dajti
Coastal Condition

Durrës, Albania
“I see them as a potential to be positive.”

Joana Dhiamandi, POLIS University

The experience of the bunkers first hand allows for a new means of classification:

- RUINATION
- TRANSFIGURATION
- INTROSPECTION
- DECONSTRUCTION

While many of the bunkers lie in ruin – slowly worn away by nature, some are altered by locals for structural, programmatic, or visual transformation. The bunkers also become agents to a collective memory in the recognition of their past or the erasure of their symbolism.
Rumble Studio, Jason Payne (UCLA)

Albanian Protestors vent anger at PM’s office, torch bunker
Arben Celi

Concrete Mushrooms
Documentary, Elian Stefa & Gyler Mydyti

EXAGGERATION
Ramble Studio, Jason Payne (UCLA)

PROTEST
Albanian Protestors vent anger at PM’s office, torch bunker
Arben Celi

SCAVENGING
Concrete Mushrooms
Documentary, Elian Stefa & Gyler Mydyti
The File on H
Ismail Kadare
1981

Expresses the censorship of information in communist Albania and its fragmented history.

The Manhattan Transcripts
Bernard Tschumi
1981

Tell story using drawings of sequence and space through movement.

Citizens of No Place
Jimenez Lai
2012

Utilizes graphics to create exaggerated future realities that reflect pressing social and economic topics.

The Odyssey
Homer
8th century BC

Is indicative of the power of narrative to be based in cultural identity without a single word being written.
The medium of graphic narrative allows for:

- The synthesis of historical moments and conditions
- The creation of imagery and perspectives that were not documented or captured
- The embellishment of critical events
- And the connection of the contemporary environment to perspectives of the past and a projective future

The epic of I Burgosur is composed of 4 chapters which employ different narrators to explore unique perspectives in moments of history and fictional future

The Epic is in equal parts:

- an analysis and documentation of the extremes of the communist regime in Albania
- political exploration into the dictatorship of the proletariat in which the working class holds power in a post-Hoxha environment
- a design implementation in which the bunkers are reinterpreted from the charged symbolism of oppression and become agents towards a collective catharsis and healing
Act 1: Hoxha’s Regime
November 28, 1912, Albania declares independence from Ottoman rule. Suffering under centuries of occupation by the Roman, Byzantine, Serbian, and Ottoman Empires, Albania establishes sovereignty after an extensive history of foreign rule. Led by Ismail Qemali, the primary author of the declaration of independence, the citizens of Vlorë witness the identity of their nation as proclaimed by the father of modern Albania.
Encroachment of Communism

A newly independent nation, Albania found itself highly impressionable amidst the post-war periods preceding the first and second world war. Without an oppressor to dictate internal political and social standards, the nation is quickly influenced by the communist theories led by Mao Zedong of the People’s Republic of China and Joseph Stalin of the Soviet Union.
A Dictator Rises

A prominent member of the labor party, Enver Hoxha rises through the political scene with the intent to implement the communist measures of Mao and Stalin. Hoxha then operates as the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Prime Minister of Albania, and First Secretary of the Party of Labor of Albania.
Consumed by Paranoia

Plagued by the constant fear of invasion, Hoxha is consumed by his paranoia to the point of national isolation. Fearing influence from or interaction with foreign nations, the paranoid dictator severs Albania from its few allies. This isolation reaches an extreme state in which Hoxha perceives any foreign influence to be a threat to the integrity of his country. A residual fear from centuries of occupation and oppression.
The Sigurimi

To maintain his radical version of communism known as Hoxhaism, the dictator establishes a relentless internal surveillance operation. Aside from stringent border control which restricts citizens from fleeing the land, Hoxha implements the Sigurimi, the Directorate of State Security. Under the guise of safety, the Sigurimi is led to spy on "suspicious" citizens. An especially invasive strategy often exhibited by the Sigurimi operatives is to carve the walls of adjacent apartments and listen to neighboring conversations for any hint of political rebelliousness.
The Engineer - Josif Zegali

Having studied military engineering in Russia, Zegali is assigned to Hoxha’s bunkerization effort where he creates the qender zjarri, the small bunker which soon covers the land of Albania. Despite designing the bunkers himself and being forced to self-test their safety under fire, Zegali is sentenced to the infamous Spaç prison in 1974 for expressing his lack of support in the dictator’s plans.
Choosing to reject the palette and subject matter as defined by the regime, Gjergo continues to paint his reflections of the unwinding trauma of communism. Viewed as rebellious and his art in direct defiance to the dictatorship, Gjergo is sentenced to Spaç prison in 1975 as his work is ‘too blue’.
Act 2: I Burgosur (The Prisoner)
I Burgosur - The Prisoner

A draftsman working under the architect Maks Velo, I Burgosur, The Prisoner, is captured and sentenced to Spaç in 1975 for his involvement in a residential building. The building stands as a ‘modernist design’, formally against the language of the dictatorship and is perceived as an invasive foreign influence. Taken from his home, I Burgosur is forcibly separated from his wife, Shpresa, presumably never to see each other again.
Persecution of the Rebellious

To silence the politically dissident, Hoxha utilizes political prisons throughout Albania. Spaç prison being one of the most infamous, functions as both a prison and a labor camp, requiring the inmates to mine every eight hours for the entirety of their sentences. Prisoners are subject to beatings or torture if quotas are not met.
Interaction through Labor

The prisoners travel into the mines where they chisel through the frigid winters of the mountains. It is within these mines that The Engineer (Zegali), The Artist (Gjergo), and The Prisoner (I Burgosur) interact. Through this continual connection, I Burgosur adopts the values of his prison mates’ minds.
The Death of Hoxha

April 11, 1985, the death of dictator Enver Hoxha leaves Albania headless. With the regime lacking organization and ability to further oppress and control the citizens of Albania, hoxhasim begins to dissipate. A new means of social coordination is imminent to satisfy the void left by the regime.
Emergence of I Burgosur

I Burgosur, The Prisoner, emerges from Spaç prison having become the confluence of the creativity of the rebellion and the engineering of its devices: the culmination of The Artist, Gjergo, and The Engineer, Zegali.
The Dictatorship of the Proletariat

Inspired by the death of Hoxha and the residual reign of communist power, the people of Albania protest for change. This protest is ignited by the proposition of I Burgosur: to treat the existing bunkers, the most recognizable symbols of oppression in Albania, as a post-produced shared good from which the collective people determine their new use. The swift removal of top-down communism is demanded and pursued through a shared means of power, specifically towards the use of the disassembled components of the bunkers.
Act 3: The Bunker
Location

Excavation
Act 4: Shpresa (Hope)
Separated from her partner, I Burgosur, during the persecution of Hoxha’s regime, Shpresa fled their home after his abduction and spent the following eight years unable to contact the prison for fear of further harm. However, amidst her role as an architect during the rise of the proletariat, she has seen the influence of such a prisoner from the same labor camp that her partner was confined to.

Shpresa, a name that translates to “hope”, is optimistic that her partner has survived the labor camp of Spaç. Through her odyssey, Shpresa searches for I Burgosur and encounters six designs which were inspired by the movement of “The Prisoner” and realized by the people of Albania. Each step of the journey becoming a reflection of the dictatorship and a moment of healing.
A testament to his reign - the museum, akin to a mausoleum. From the moment of its conception it stood as a reminder of his legacy. Why remember a fallen dictator?

THE CONCRETE CURTAIN
The Concrete Curtain

The Museum of Hoxha is now contained by the walls of the bunker. Viewed to many as a mausoleum, the pyramid serves as a counter-monument - careful not to erase a painful past, but instead to memorialize those afflicted by his reign. It is here that Shpresa’s odyssey begins as she searches for I Burgosur, The Prisoner.

While speaking with another victim of the regime, she is told of a prison where she can enquire about the disappeared. As the agents of the dictatorship destroyed prison records, the knowledge of I Burgosur rests with the imprisoned agent himself.
The Concrete Curtain

ACT 4, SC. 3

The Concrete Curtain

ACT 4, SC. 4
Their identities became known - the same oppressors who imprisoned the innocent were detained themselves. When Hoxha passed and the regime crumbled... their supremacy faded.

THE PRISON
The Prison

The actors of the regime: the spies, corrupt politicians, prison guards and executioners are tried for their crimes against the people of Albania. Now they crouch to enter their bunker cells in a prison off the coastal city of Durrës.
Shpresa speaks to Vako through the bunker cell's rebar. Vako was the chief engineer of the Sigurimi, responsible in reporting I Burgosur’s involvement in modernist architecture, the charge of foreign influence which initially separated him from Shpresa nearly a decade ago. Vako suggests Shpresa speak to Liço, the officer of the ward of Spaç where I Burgosur was sentenced.
An open field, littered with reinforced tombstones. To live by the dictator - to rest with his devices. The recognition of their past allegiance. Marked forever...

THE CEMETERY
The Cemetery

Those who persecuted, maimed, and oppressed the innocent of Albania are now marked indefinitely. Each bunker piece representing a different role in the assistance of the dictatorship as it marks the agents of the regime indefinitely.

Shpresa traces the name of Liço to the cemetery. Because the records of I Burgosur were destroyed during the demise of the regime, the now deceased ward of Spaç was her final hope in the search for the identity of her partner. Shpresa returns to Tirana, unsuccessful.
Restrictions and blanket illegality - the religious were barred from their devotion. Unable to practice their faith, forced to hide. A renaissance of religious expression...

THE PANTHEON
The Pantheon

Declared an “atheist state” during the dictatorship, Albanians were forbidden from practicing their religions. The regime executed clergymen and imprisoned those found pursuing their faith – so much as crossing yourself would be met with imprisonment. However, religion persevered in secrecy. Those who previously prayed in hiding now celebrate their religion in the pantheon: composed of the majority Islamic, and minority Orthodox and Catholic faiths.
Shpresa passes where the statue of Hoxha once stood as she moves through the pavilions of religious expression. Evoking the memory of when she was forced to hide her prayers for the safety and return of her abducted partner. Now her religion is visible to all.
Their childhood stripped away, forced to witness the regime. The children, the passive spectators punished by the paranoia of a dictator... now given a chance to play.

THE PLAYGROUND
The Playground

Within the former communist bloc, the fallen dictator’s yard is now repossessed by children free of the regime. The symbols of oppression become painted objects of irrelevance to the kids climbing over hills and running through tunnels.
Shpresa enters through the gate of Hoxha’s former home. A field which was always locked and guarded is now alive with children playing, a reminder to Shpresa of the generation of children scarred by the dictatorship and the separated couples like herself that were forced into a childless life.
The displaced, the persecuted. Searching for asylum in their native land. A communal effort, an aggregation, providing housing for its keepers - the survivors.

THE TOWERS.
The Towers

Constructed throughout the urban context, these towers provide shelter for the displaced victims of the dictatorship as they are granted apartments within the prefabricated clusters.
Shpresa returns to her apartment, unsuccessful in finding information on the location of her separated partner, I Burgosur.
In her empty studio, Shpresa sees him, but he’s not there, only the fading memory of his image. Although Shpresa, like many Albanians, has survived the paranoia of the dictator and may have reclaimed his bunkers, residual trauma remains—trauma that only fades with each distanced generation.
READINGS
Kraus, Rosalind. Sculpture in the Expanded Field, Vol. 8, Spring 1979, "October".

ONLINE
