STAYING CONNECTED

Alumni Relations is all about connecting—keeping classmates connected with each other and alumni connected with SU. Such traditional methods as class reunions, club functions, and publications are an integral part of making that happen.

Because we value you as alumni and want to make staying connected as easy as possible, we are proud to announce that this spring we will launch an online community, providing all alumni with access to a protected alumni directory site through a secure password. Once you have registered as a member of the community, you will be able to look up classmates and friends through a variety of search fields. We are pleased to provide this free service to you as a way of saying thank you for your continued support and involvement with SU.

Additionally we'll offer you permanent e-mail. We will provide an e-mail forwarding service, so if your e-mail address or Internet provider changes, you will always be able to stay in touch, with a permanent address such as yourname@alum.syr.edu.

Since you are an important part of the SU family, we value your involvement, loyalty, and support. We believe giving alumni the ability to connect online and stay in touch with each other will be invaluable and ultimately benefit our University.

At the time of publication we did not yet have a launch date for the directory or e-mail forwarding service. We will announce specifics on our web site and urge you to refer to it for updated information. If you have questions, please e-mail Karen Merrill, our online community manager, at kjmerril@syr.edu.

ALUMNI BAND ON THE MARCH

When Dan Baldinger '53 played saxophone in the United States Marching Band, he stood alone in his enjoyment of it. "A total of 143 members were in the band; 142 hated it, but I loved it," he says.

Baldinger has taken that enthusiasm and focused it on reviving the SU Alumni Band. As former chair and now co-chair of the band, Baldinger is committed to its success. "It's fun, and we want to continue to grow," he says.

To grow, the band had to improve its communications to attract new members. That's when Baldinger decided to help get the band back in step. "Last year, I contacted Brad Ethington, director of the SU Marching Band, and Erin Horner '90, G'92," he says. "We worked together, forming committees, planning, and compiling mailing lists. We are excited about the future."

Their perseverance paid off, and the band turned a corner during Homecoming '99. Baldinger donated T-shirts for the event, and members suited up in the matching shirts, blue pants, and white sneakers. "A huge span of ages came back," Horner says. "There were 45 of us who marched in the Dome. It was a phenomenal experience."

Horner's drive, determination, and involvement led to her nomination as chair of the Alumni Band Association. "I really love this band; it is near and dear to my heart," says Horner, who has been active with the alumni band since 1993.

CHICAGO ALUMNI CLUB

Alison Muench Hough '95 was recently honored as the 1999 Alumni Club Officer of the Year for her work in revitalizing the Chicago Alumni Club. As club president, Hough, who works for the Chicago Office of Tourism, has attracted new members to the club and set up a calendar of events. The club's membership had dwindled the past several years, but Hough recruited other recent graduates to serve on the club's board—and her energy and enthusiasm have proven contagious. "I returned to Chicago after graduation and started investigating alumni activities to continue my connection with the University," she says. "I discovered the club was basically inactive. I talked to some friends and within a month we created a board of four officers and began to plan events."

The club also has embraced the new council concept by getting other SU alumni organizations in the area involved, particularly alumni representatives. These alumni often volunteer through the Office of Admissions to attend college fairs and help recruit new students to the University. David Marut '88, a member of the alumni representative program, now serves on the club's board. "We help recruit alumni to volunteer at college fairs," Hough says. "Working with the reps also provides us with information about the University's student recruitment process and what's new at SU."

With no Big East schools in the area, SU sports teams rarely play there, so the club works hard at organizing events to attract alumni of all ages. During the past year, the club hosted a New Student Send-off party, an alumni dinner, a networking event, a Halloween party, and TV game-watching events. The club also launched its new web site (www.windycityorange.org) in January. The site features a special section for members, and a listing of club activities, and allows people to join the club online.

In the future, the club hopes to expand its membership base by attracting more alumni in the area. "Through building relationships and continued communication, we have created a strong alumni database with more than 200 contacts," Hough says. "We are trying to sponsor a good mix of activities to attract alumni from a variety of backgrounds and class years. Our main goal is to keep in touch with each other and the University. That's a connection none of us wants to lose."

DISTINGUISHED ALUMNI HONORED

Three SU alumni will be honored in June as the latest recipients of the George Arents Pioneer Medal, the University's highest award to alumni.

Renée Schine Crown '50 of Wilmette, Illinois, has pursued a life of public service and civic leadership. An integral member of SU's Board of Trustees, in the 1980s she spearheaded the effort to establish the Schine Student Center. She also is a member of the College of Arts and Sciences Board of Visitors, and served as board chair in 1997-98. In Illinois, she works with a variety of medical, social, and educational organizations, including the Chicago Boys and Girls Club, the Chicago Field Museum of Natural History, and the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

cator, scholar, and librarian. As a world-renowned expert on Albert Schweitzer, she has been the driving force behind SU's prominent Schweitzer collection. She has donated much of her family's Schweitzer memorabilia to SU, and has been instrumental in helping the University obtain thousands of Schweitzer materials from his family, the Schweitzer Center, and other sources. A former Guggenheim Fellow, Lemke served on the School of Information Studies faculty from 1952 through 1986, and is now a professor emerita of the school. She has served on the SU Library Associates Board for many years, and was president of the board from 1988 to 1992. During her career, Lemke has written several books; contributed to numerous journals, encyclopedias, and anthologies; and lectured worldwide. She is an active board member, officer, and consultant to a variety of educational, professional, and civic organizations.

Currently a member of the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs Advisory Board, Charles V. Willie G'57 has been an ambassador for Maxwell and Syracuse University for many years. He has more than 40 years of service in higher education. In 1950, Willie joined the Maxwell faculty as a sociology professor and was named chair of the sociology department in 1967. In 1972, he became the vice president for student affairs, a post he held for two years before moving on to the Harvard University Graduate School of Education as a professor of education and urban studies. A noted civil rights advocate and sociologist, Willie is a council member and vice president of the American Sociological Association, and has published widely in the fields of education, health, race relations, urban studies, and family relations.

TRAVELS WITH SU

Jerry '41 and Isabella Manhold of Venice, Florida, found a recent trip to the Greek Islands with a group of SU alumni and friends to be a wonderful diversion from the beaten path. "There was a sense of not being in the mainstream," says Jerry Manhold.

The couple have traveled extensively, but agreed this trip ranks at the top of their list. A favorite adventure for Jerry was a visit to Epidauros, an ancient theater. "I stood on the stage that once accommodated 12,000 people," he says. "I spoke in a normal tone, and my voice was clearly audible in the back rows. It was amazing."

His enjoyment of the trip is shared by Jean Cudworth Willis '46 of Cortland, New York. "I always wanted to go to Greece," she says. "It was everything I expected and more. The scenery was beautiful, with little white houses with red roofs lining the hills."

The group began its journey with a brief stop in Athens, then traveled to Poros, a small island of about nine square miles.

The travelers stayed at Hotel Sirene, a seven-story hotel chiseled out of the side of a mountain. "It looked like a white jewel glistening in the sun," Jerry Manhold says. Each room provided a breathtaking view of the sea. And the hotel proved a perfect escape

MISSING YEARBOOKS

Don't discard that old yearbook you found in the attic. The Office of Alumni Relations is missing several yearbooks from its collection and would be happy to give your extra yearbooks a new home. Missing from the collection are the following years: 1941, 1956, 1957, 1959, 1960, 1980, 1984, 1988, 1989, and 1990. Contact the office at 1-800-SUALUMS (782-5867), if you can help.

after a day of walking tours and lectures. "It was a nice mix of history, lectures, and travel," says Esther Feagins of Penfield, New York. Esther, along with her husband, Richard '70, enjoyed the balmy weather and activities.

Each day had a built-in educational focus. Participants enjoyed such lectures as "Dream Healing in the Ancient World," "A View of Greek Art," and "Mythological History of Poros and Ancient Trizina." The hotel also held a Greek night, featuring classical Greek dancing with performers in native costumes. Other excursions included a cruise to Hydra and visits to the Monastery of Poros and the Sanctuary of Poseidon.

The highlight of the tour came with a stop in Athens. The group enjoyed the neo-classical buildings of the Academy, the University, and the National Library, as well as the Pan-Athenian Stadium, site of the first modern Olympic games. A visit to the Acropolis and the Parthenon was also included. "Greece is a physically beautiful place, clean and friendly," Jerry Manhold says. "We loved being there."

ALUMNI MEET IN TOKYO

The Japan Alumni Association held a gathering and business meeting in December at the Tokyo American Club. More than 150 alumni, friends, and their guests attended the event, which featured School of Management Dean George Burman and Associate Dean Peter Koveos, Trustee William J. Smith '50, and SU professors Tej Bhatia of the College of Arts and Sciences and Hiroshi Higuchi of the L.C. Smith College of Engineering and Computer Science.

Burman updated the group on the latest happenings at SU and the School of Management, and Koveos discussed Syracuse's programs in China and Japan and relations between the United States and the two countries. The gathering was also addressed by Bhatia, who is at Tokyo University for a year doing research, and Higuchi, who is working on research at Tohoku University.

Smith shared greetings from Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw and the Board of Trustees, and presented Akira Ohtomo '52, head of the Japan Alumni Association, with a gift for all he has done on behalf of SU. Smith, who has been visiting Japan for more than 25 years and still serves as an advisor and director to Japanese companies, noted that in the 21st century the world economy would become even more global and called for closer relationships between the University and alumni in the Far East, especially Japan.

"It's rewarding to know that SU's mission is important to our alumni and friends located so far from here," says Lil O'Rourke, associate vice president for alumni relations. "We're happy to know they feel connected not only to SU but to each other, because of their common bond."

EVERY EXHIBITION OPENING

Lubin House celebrated the opening of its newly renovated art gallery with a gala October reception for Milton Avery Revisited: Works from the Louis and Annette Kaufman Collection, an exhibition of rarely shown paintings and works on paper, most of them not seen in New York for more than 50 years.

Among those attending were Annette Kaufman, a Los Angeles-based friend of the University who agreed to lend the works in the show to SU for two years; March Avery Cavanaugh, the artist's daughter; Chancellor Kenneth A. and Mary Ann Shaw; Kitty Carlisle Hart H'97 and art collector Roy Neuberger; and architect Richard S. Hayden '60, who oversaw the gallery's renovation.

The exhibition, which was on view through late November, was the best attended in Lubin House's history, drawing more than 2,000 visitors. Milton Avery Revisited will be shown in Lowe Art Gallery on campus September 17 to October 20.

SU FRIENDS REUNITE

For Carol Jantz Caso '66 and Todd Caso '65, Syracuse University has been woven into the fabric of their lives for more than 30 years. "We are an SU family," Todd says.

The couple married last summer at Hendricks Chapel after a 10-year courtship and a friendship that began on campus in the sixties. They met as undergraduates while working at campus radio station

Todd Caso '65 and Carol Jantz Caso '66

WAER. After graduation, they went their separate ways, but "never really forgot each other," says Todd.

With the publication of the Alumni Directory in 1988, Todd noticed Carol's name and realized she lived just 15 miles from his suburban New York home. After meeting for lunch, they discovered time had done little to erase their feelings for each other.

Their marriage ceremony on July 24, 1999, was a celebration of their life together at SU. The Rev. Thomas Wolfe, dean of Hendricks Chapel, presided over the ceremony, as did Bernard J. Quinn '65, a lay priest in Maryland and Todd's classmate.

The couple reside in Pomona, New York. Carol is employed in administration at Union Carbide, and Todd is a producer/archivist at NBA Entertainment. Despite busy schedules, they return to campus often to visit friends and family. Two of Carol's daughters—Caitlin '00 and Meghan '03—attend SU; a third, Elizabeth, graduated in 1993.

A PREMIER GATHERING PLACE

When the Goldstein Alumni and Faculty Center officially opened in October 1997, it was seen as a home for returning alumni and a place where the University community could interact. Today it lives up to those expectations, serving as a multipurpose center complete with dining services, meeting/reception rooms, lounge, and terrace. "It is the best place on campus to eat, but it's important not to lose sight of the fact that the center is much more than a dining facility," says SU Trustee Wendy Cohen '70. "It is important as a place of interaction among students, staff, faculty, and alumni, and as a priority facility for alumni and faculty events."

After an initial gift from Trustee Dick '50 and Sarah Pietrafesa, Cohen championed the project, and her parents, Trustee Alfred R. Goldstein H'85 and Ann Lubin Goldstein '48, provided a naming gift. The center also received funding through many alumni contributions. The refurbished three-story Colonial Georgian building, located on University Place, formerly housed the Faculty Center, and, before that, Delta Kappa Epsilon. In the building's new configuration, its uses have been greatly expanded. It features plenty of space for dining, events, and meetings, and houses the Office of Alumni Relations on the third floor. Alumni visitors are welcomed at the Alumni Lounge, where they can have a cup of coffee and plan their campus visits.

Brad Strait '58, G'60, G'65, dean emeritus of the L.C. Smith College of Engineering and Computer Science, found the idea of such a facility appealing from the beginning. "I knew it was going to be fantastic," he says. "It's something we sorely needed."

Strait, a former member of the center's advisory board, considers it an ideal gathering place for a group of retired faculty he meets with regularly. "We are happy to meet there once a month for lunch," he says. "It is such a classy place."

Strait also looks forward to future gatherings at the center. "I can't wait to have receptions on that front porch," he says.

Providing meals to alumni, faculty, staff, and students is just one of the many responsibilities of Lisa Maffiore '90, general manager of the center. During lunch hours the center bustles with business. Under her direction, the center also caters luncheon meetings, banquets, and alumni gatherings. "We have a lot of repeat customers," she says.

So what does the future hold for the center? "This summer we are planning to have new columns installed outside the building, as well as some new signage," Cohen says. "We're also planning some exciting programming to attract more students and alumni."

Reflecting on her family's involvement with the center, Cohen is pleased with the progress that has been made. "It is a great center, and SU is doing a wonderful job with it," she says. "We now have a focal point when we come home."

The Goldstein Alumni and Faculty Center has become a focal point for alumni events and other activities.

MANY THANKS

One alumni club president recently completed her term of office. We thank her for her continuing commitment.

walter Broadnax G'75

For Walter Broadnax, the epiphany came in an undergraduate course on state and local government. "I realized that by working within government, I could change the condition in which people live and improve their lives," he says. "It was an amazing thought."

So began a career that's moved between public service and education and now finds Broadnax as dean of the School of Public Affairs at American University in Washington, D.C. Along the way he's served two U.S. presidents and the governor of New York, taught, and led a think tank.

Shortly after Broadnax received an M.P.A. degree from the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, he became principal deputy assistant secretary in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare under President Jimmy Carter. "It was the beginning of the last round," he says. "We were saying grace over a massive set of child care regulations that were eventually signed when I came back to government under President Clinton. We set them in motion; it took from 1980 to 1994."

After a stint teaching at Harvard, he became president of the New York State Civil Service Commission under Governor Mario Cuomo, and then became president of the Center for Governmental Research in Rochester, New York, a think tank that worked for corporations in the area.

He returned to government service as deputy secretary and COO of the Department of Health and Human Services under Donna Shalala G'70, a friend from Maxwell. "Even though the Clinton health care reform initiative failed, it brought health care to the table," he says. "We were really wonks who had poor communications and lost our political guidance system."

Broadnax credits his years on the Maxwell Advisory Board and now on SU's Board of Trustees with preparing him for his role at American University. "Syracuse gave me the most profound personal and academic experience I've ever had," he says. "This is a wonderful way to spend your life. If you really want to make a difference and have it sustained, you can do that in no better place than academe or public service."

daniel s. Fietkiewicz '73

ong before the violence in East Timor made headlines, Daniel Fietkiewicz was deeply concerned about the situation there. A freelance interpreter and translator, Fietkiewicz traveled to East Timor in April 1999 as a volunteer with Peace Brigades International (PBI), a nonpartisan human rights and peace organization. "Our four-person exploratory team was sent to determine whether PBI should establish a long-term presence in East Timor," he says.

PBI accompanies groups around the world that are working toward nonviolent political or social change. "PBI representatives don't choose sides," Fietkiewicz says. "They create a presence so people who threaten or initiate violence know their actions will be witnessed and reported."

While in East Timor, Fietkiewicz's team spoke with people representing all sides of the fight for independence that's been ongoing since Indonesia invaded the territory in 1975 and annexed it shortly thereafter. "I'll always remember April 17, the day the militia—armed and led by the Indonesian military—stormed the capital city," Fietkiewicz says. "People were killed or forced into hiding. But they risked their lives to talk to us, saying, 'When you go back home, tell the world what is happening here.'"

Fietkiewicz, a 1973 political science graduate of the College of Arts and Sciences, developed an interest in the politics and languages of South Asia and India while at SU. He earned a master's degree from the University of Missouri, received a scholarship to study Hindi in India, and participated in an intensive Indonesian language program at Cornell University. He taught English in Indonesia for two years, then returned to Cornell to co-write an Indonesian language textbook still used by colleges and universities.

Originally from Syracuse, Fietkiewicz now lives with his wife, Brenda Yanni, an advisor to PBI, in Hewitt, New Jersey. "I attended SU during a time of political upheaval and social change," Fietkiewicz says. "You can't go through that without something being engraved on your soul about the sanctity of human life and the value and dignity of humankind."

patricia Battin G'67

As she accepted the prestigious 1999 National Humanities Medal from President Bill Clinton and First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton last fall, librarian Patricia Battin focused her thoughts on the profession she loves, not on her accomplishments. "The award is a real recognition of the major contributions the library profession makes to our culture," she says.

Battin, who earned a master's degree in library science at the School of Information Studies in 1967, was honored for her vision and leadership in establishing a national program to preserve the country's written heritage. After four years at Columbia University as director of library services and nine years as university librarian and vice president for information services, Battin left to become founding president of the Commission on Preservation and Access, established in 1987 by the Council on Library Resources to develop ways to preserve millions of volumes of decaying, archived materials in university and college libraries. "Our intellectual heritage, primarily in our research libraries and archives throughout the United States, is printed on acidic paper, which has a shelf life of only about 50 years," says Battin, who is retired but remains active in the field.

Against the odds, Battin organized a national, interdisciplinary, grass-roots campaign to establish a program to preserve the materials, and improve access to them through shared catalogs and information systems. Her 1988 testimony before Congress resulted in a 20-year program of funding through the National Endowment for the Humanities to preserve the materials on microfilm. Since then, more than 770,000 brittle volumes have been salvaged. She was also instrumental in forming a European Commission on Preservation and Access.

But for Battin, such accomplishments are simply a reflection of the role librarians play in society. "In our profession, nobody does anything alone. It is a group effort," she says.

susan Schwenderman '87

When many people think of Philadelphia, they think of the Declaration of Independence, the Liberty Bell—and that's about all. Susan Schwenderman, a 1987 graduate of the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications, is setting out to change that. As director of marketing communications for Philadelphia 2000, the city's host committee for the July 2000 Republican National Convention, Schwenderman is working to portray Philadelphia not only as a nice place to visit—but also a great place to live.

"We were thrilled when Philadelphia was awarded the convention," says Schwenderman. "This brings a great deal of attention to the city and puts us in the media spotlight."

As director of communications for the Philadelphia Convention and Visitors Bureau from 1996 to 1998, Schwenderman managed the department responsible for media relations, publications, and media promotions to increase the city's tourism and convention business. In 1999 she became director of membership and communications services.

In her Philadelphia 2000 role, Schwenderman is working with the city's community and political leaders to prepare for the first political convention to be held there since 1948.

More than 45,000 people are expected to attend, 15,000 of whom are national and international media professionals. "We'll take advantage of this unique opportunity to showcase Philadelphia," Schwenderman says.

Responsibilities of the host committee include producing media and visitor's guides, coordinating media tours, training 10,000 volunteers, and organizing special events like PoliticalFest, a multimedia, interactive festival. "Our staff is excited to be involved," Schwenderman says. "It will be intense, but lots of fun."

Schwenderman works closely with Bill Gehrman

Susan Schwenderman '87 and Bill Gehrman '92

'92, a Newhouse alumnus and director of publications and new media for the Philadelphia Convention and Visitors Bureau. Both are reaching out via the Internet and the Philadelphia alumni organization to involve other SU alumni in what Schwenderman calls a once-in-a-lifetime experience. "We hope to make this red, white, and blue event a little more orange," she says.

None suggests that being a resident advisor (RA) at SU leads to romance and marriage, but for at least two couples it did. Their experiences shaped not only their personal lives, but their professional ones as well. The four became friends while students, remain friends today, and all four have a continuing involvement with SU.

It wasn't exactly love at first sight, but Sue Cornelius and Rob Edson did become fast friends when they met at an RA training session in 1987. "We were friends and co-workers first," Sue says, "and that's the key to having stayed together for 12 years." Married in 1996, the former Flint Hall RAs remain co-workers: She is SU's director of athletic communications, and he is associate athletics director for finance and team services.

Sue graduated from the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications with a degree in broadcast journalism, and soon joined the SU athletic communications team.

Rob, who earned a bachelor's degree in psychology in the College of Arts and Sciences, returned to SU in 1991. He oversees day-to-day financial matters for the athletics department and manages games for men's basketball and football. "Helping young people make transitions is something we did as RAs and continue to do in our roles here," he says.

Jackie Gorsky and John Mandyck met in their first semester at SU and, like the Edsons, first became friends. "We actually did kiss on the Kissing Bench," Jackie confesses. After graduating from the School of Management, she became a senior program analyst for the New York State Assembly. She was working for Rural Metro Medical Services when John returned to SU to secure an M.P.A. degree from the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs. Now she's director of community relations at Trinity College in Hartford, Connecticut, promoting a $100 million 16-acre campus adjacent to the college that will house four new programs for pre-K to 12th grade.

Jacqueline Gorsky Mandyck '89 and John Mandyck '89, G'92

The Connecticut move occurred when John became executive assistant to Carrier Corp.'s president. Now he is the corporation's vice president for government and international relations, a job that uses all the lobbying skills he's developed since being elected president of SU's Student Government Association. "I always liked taking an idea and seeing if I could get it through the governmental process to a particular end," he says.

He serves on the Board of Visitors of the College of Arts and Sciences. "It's rewarding to still be connected to the University on a professional level," he says. "I had a valuable experience at Syracuse and this is one way to give a little back."
