

Orthogonal Organic

Program ranging from retail to recreation will be injected into the now underutilized area directly surrounding Onondaga Creek, the carotid artery of the city of Syracuse in order to connect vital urban nodes of activity within the city. The implanted architecture would engage the site both horizontally and vertically, weaving together the orthogonal city grid with the organic form of the dilapidated creek bed. Through this injection, Syracuse residents are provided an opportunity for recreational activity within the downtown area as well as an ambiguous environment within which to experience the urban environment.

22-25 < Andy Silipo

